The sentiment paid him a very high compliment, and though he was conscious he had been too highly praised yet he hoped he had contributed consthing; at least, to the well-being of society, and to science, art and labor. Mr. 6. gave a short account of his successes in our city. Fourtien, years ago he came here a poor man. He managed, in partnership with his father-in-lew, Mr. Scoville, to creet a small shanty where they made ploves and should heave. He next managed to served a small machine shop (which has now grown into the most extensive satablishment in the West—Ea.) He detailed the financial and other efficulties through which he had passed, adverting to them only on se example and incontive to the young mear around him to lead lives of industry and probley. The spacker paid sime handsome compliments to his retiring partner Mr. Fraser, which were received with hearty appliance.
